SOFT SKILLS

Autonomy & organization

Philosophy teaches you to think autonomously; an Italian department of philosophy forces you to be autonomous in practice. To survive to the disorganization I developed a tidy mindset and a practical attention to details.

Fast learning

A multidisciplinary education teaches you to be a fast and autonomous learner. This was useful also in my internship as a researcher in Trento.

Creativity & Spirit of initiative

My heterogenous path shows that I like to challenge the ordinary and I often take the initiative. That's why I ended up founding a magazine, pursuing various interests and switching continuously academic disciplines.

Team playing

I am a team player. I like a cooperative environment where I do my part, whatever it will be, without meddle with the existing leadership. Often, in my academic team works, I also took the responsibility of whole projects when other people were unable or unwilling to do it.

Flexibility

Academic team works (and flat sharings) teach me to be flexible: to reach a collective goal you have to adapt to personal differences. Be a fast learner allows me to be adaptable. And philosophical patience does the rest.

Reliability

If I take a commitment I honor it. Period. It's an ethical matter: the unquestionable fundament of collective life.
